Setting

The high reaches of Roostville valley

The valley of Roostville can be found high up in the mountains as a plateau valley in between the three largest spires that the Black feather mountains have to offer. The surrounding spires stab through the bed of cloud, diverting them away and leaving the valley to enjoy the sun at almost all times during the day. Rain is therefore an uncommon occurrence in Roostville and leaves the inhabitants reliant upon the river to keep them and their lands from dehydration. Luckily the rivers seem to have an endless supply of the cleanest water as it flows down from the top of the mountains, pooling together in the middle to create a singular lake in the middle of the valley, leaving its water for ever turning and churning before it finally narrows down again to flow further down the mountain into the valleys below.

Roostville's high position provides a lot of sun for vegetation but the harsher temperatures can make it difficult for more delicate flora to bloom. As such most of the valley is filled with large rolling grass fields, bushes and here and there a lone pine tree. The uneven grounds of the valley lend themselves well to vines and waterfalls and make rocky outcroppings and gravelly paths a normality instead of an exception. Roostville, though small, still holds a considerable amount of inhabitants so pathways and fences are strewn about and around the valley together with bridges to cross the occasional stream.

Most of Roostville's food is produced on the farms that reach as far as the eye can see (which is not terribly far as the valley is not that big). Barns and farms are placed liberally in the valley, making the whole valley into one large village. The center of the valley offers a small collection of general buildings, forming the heart of the village. Along the edges of the valley multiple plateaus can be found climbing up the spires, mimicking the form of giant stairs reaching up into the sky. Each plateau shrinks in size the higher it reaches but the lower ones are easily big enough to hold their own farms with room to spare.

Gods do not play a large part in the lives of Roostvillers, they live their lives high above the ground of commoners. According to their beliefs if gods were to exist they would've surely shown themselves already as no land could be better for them to live in than that of Roostville. No gods are busy with the work of the low-livers, here in Roostville those worthy of worship walk amongst them. Life, as the Roostvillers know it, would not be possible were it not for the strong breed of chickens that live here. They give the valley life through the eggs and meat they provide and the high spirits they keep amongst themselves and the Roostvillers. As such the chickens are revered through all of Roostville. One would not be hardpressed to find the imagery depicting chickens on buildings and other structures, or possibly even a chicken shrine or two to pay reference to their chicken companions.

gran'pa cock and the rights to his farm

The story has been told for years, Gran'pa cock and his farm created the world's best roosters the world has ever seen. But as time passed even Gran'pa cock, famous for his immense work drive and the love for his cocks, grew old and weak. With his time to enter the great cockvana drawing near, it was time for Gran'pa cock to choose the heir to his farm, but his healthy love for cock had left him without a heir. Without a worthy heir to take over the farm there was nothing else Gran'pa Cock could do but call for the age-old Cock games, to find those whose love for cock could match his own. Many a Cock family came up to fight for the rights but few made it through the preliminaries but, with the preliminaries now being behind us, it is time to look at the contenders that remained, and to begin the official Cock games.

Family Badehg

The road behind them was a long and treacherous one, filled with dangers any sane man would readily avoid. However, luckily for the Badehgs, none of them appear to be anywhere within the reach of sane. The Badehg have been known throughout the world as a family of weird practices and even weirder rumours. Apparently they choose to sleep in the barn with their chickens, only to have the chickens move into their bedrooms as the Badehgs are even weirder for their own flock to stay around. According to the Badehg family rule no one is allowed to eat before all family

- Contenders are farming families from Roostville members are gathered around the table, which get's surprisingly hard since they count every chicken in their flock as their sons and daughters, leaving most family members thin and gangly.

Mushka Badehg (Big archetype)

The mother of the family and the leader of the family, much to Papuska's dismay. Muska seems to be slightly traumatised after she once ate a chicken in a restaurant and she now believes that she inhabits the spirits of the diseased chickens, which outsiders might notice by the decaying rooster she wears as a hat, the large egg suit she wears (according to her it resembles rebirth) and her incessant need to cluck after every sentence. Muska stands out as the only Badehg large in size and round in shape. The rule where non may eat before all are seated might apply to her as well but none ever said anything about not being allowed to taste the food she prepares...

Papuska Badehg (The fast one)

The father of the family and the possibly the thinnest of all. Papuska always insisted that the new fangled chicken food is bad for the digestion system, insisting on only eating the straw and hay that the chickens lay on. Thin as a straw and light as a feather you'll often find Papuska being carried by the wind instead of his own limbs, as if he were to fly... that is of course if he isn't chasing after another lusty hen when Mushka aint looking. Some who see Papuska for the first time stood flabbergasted the moment they found out he, in fact, is not an actual scarecrow.

Sevka Badehg (The smart one)

The "adopted" son of the family and the only fairly sane one of the bunch. Sevka is not the actual son of Muska and Papuska but the result of a childhood party gone bad. As a young child prodigy Sevka spend most of his days locked up in his room, reading up on all the forms of theoretical physics, admiring his books as his actual true friends. His parents however, found his introversion quirky at best and horrifyingly boring at worst. Not wanting their son to grow into an antisocial shut in they forced him to attend his nephews costumed birthday party and stuffed him in the first suit they found, a rooster suit. Obviously once the Badehgs saw a cock as big as he they couldn't believe their eyes and they just had to have him. Even now, 15 years later he's still forced to wear his rooster suit every single day or risk the wrath of his now foster parents. Who knows what it does to a boy's sanity to live like that for so many years...

Unkah Badehg (The gadgety one)

Unkah, the long lost sister of Mushka, was raised in the outback of Hennigan Woods, far away from her sister and dear mother. There she spend her time tinkering and building to her hearts content, only ever wishing to help the world. With the help of her childhood friend and eventual lover she build the unimaginable machines, surpassing what any sole human could ever hope to imagine. However even the best things have an end... Her machine, one that would solve world hunger, misfired, turning her darling sweetheart into a chicken only to be found and eaten by the unknowing villagers she grew up with. In a fit of loss, rage and insanity she turned her whole village into chickens. Years later her sister followed a lead on a chicken city, only to find her sitting there, feathers glued to her body trying to communicate with her former villagers, her machine, no malfunctioning, affixed to her back, to carry the everlasting burden of the loss of her sanity.

Future contenders

Family O'mallet

The celtic bastards among the bunch, Strong, gruff and passionate but certainly not the smartest.

Family Benedictus

Posh, fabulous, noble and obviously british. you'll need to bring a dictionary to talk with this bunch as they insent on using only the most fancy of words.

family Igrull

Headstrong, impossible to reason with, and incapable of thinkg that their way is the wrong wat. In short, french and annoying, wait.. isn't that a pleonasm?
